DISTRIBUTION UNEVEN.

The distribution of the supply, however, is uneven, the Liverpool stock being 33,500 less than last year, while the continental markets hold 102,000 more than a year ago. Continental mills at the end of May had on hand 243,000 bales in excess of the previous year, while the excess of English mills was only 124,000 bales, of which about one-half was Egyptian cotton, which is chelfy used for very fine yarns. It is probable, therefore, that desirable grades of cotton will be in fairly good demand in England until the new crop begins to move in September, notwithstanding the fact that most of the English mills agreed on June 18th to work only four days of each week. This action was taken chiefly in consequence of the high price of cotton.

"A number of American mills are now running on short time from the same reason, and some have actually suspended operations. On February 20th middling cotton was ten cents per pound in New York, find print cloths were three and a quarter cents per yard. Frint cloths are now quoted at exactly the same price, while middling cotton was quoted here on June 26th at thirteen and sixty one hundredths cents, and at thirteen cents to-day. It is perfectly evident that cotton at present prices cannot be manufactured into yarns and goods anywhere except at a serious loss, it may be added that cotton goods are very dull there and alroad.

where except at a serious loss. It may be added that cotton goods are very dull here and abroad.

"The great advance in cotton is largely speculative, based upon the comparatively small stocks, especially in England and the backwardness of the new cotton crop. The size of the growing crop will depend entirely upon weather conditions hereafter. The pre-ent lateness may be overcome, and as the acreage is the largest ever planted, and the use of fertillizers more liberal than heretofore, it is quite possible that a large crop may be grown. It is idle to speculate upon the matter at this time, but it is well to remember that some of our largest crops have been late ones.

"In considering the present supply of cotton in the world, it is well to recall that, according to the figures of the New York Chronicle, the present visible supply of cotton is 469,000 bales more than three years ago, while the spinners, stocks are about 409,000 ales more in the scarcely necessary to say that I have
